Senate Bill 364, effective January 1, 2014, amended the Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) Act. As a result of these amendments, the old advisement form is out of date and should no longer be used.

Statutory authority changed from Welfare and Institutions Code (WIC) Section 5157 to WIC 5150(f) and (g)

The following language has been changed:

You may make a phone call and leave a note to tell your friends or family where you have been taken.

Language or Modality Used

There is a new box for listing the language or modality used in giving the advisement. This box must be filled in for each advisement. There are two requirements:

1. The advisement must be given orally in a language or modality accessible to the person.
2. If the person cannot understand an oral advisement, the information shall be provided in writing.

First, this means that the oral advisement must be given in a language or modality the person understands. This includes languages other than English if the person does not understand English. It also includes American Sign Language (ASL) or other sign language if the person is deaf or hard of hearing and uses ASL or other sign language.

Second, this means that if the person cannot understand an oral advisement, the advisement must be given in writing.

Mental health disorder (rather than mental disorder)

The Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) Act has been amended to provide for detention for danger to others/self or grave disability by reason of a mental health disorder. Formerly, LPS provided for detention by reason of a mental disorder. This change is reflected in the new advisement form.
